Sourov attended the Cambridge CELTA course on the above dates.

He put a lot of work into planning and during the course there was significant progress, particularly in analysing language and being able to present this in his lessons. CELTA is very intensive and although Sourov showed steady improvement in staging for different lesson types, he needed more time for this than was available on a course of this type.

During the input sessions, Sourov participated actively making a positive and useful contribution to each session. During TP observations and in feedback, Sourov was supportive of his peers, and made some astute comments on their teaching. He was always professional and positive in his outlook.

Sourov has shown that he has the potential to be a competent teacher of English who enjoys a good working relationship with both students and colleagues. With further training, support and experience he should continue to develop as an effective teacher of English.
